TARIFF PICTURES.

N. Y. Press: Protection struggles for foreign commerce, shouts the tariff "reformers." Facts, as usual, are against him. The combined foreign trade of ten leading countries of Europe grew so rapidly under thirty-five years of protection that for every

in goods imported in 1854 they imported	$100
in 1889, while each $100 of Great Britain's imports in 1854 grew during the same period under free trade only to	$281

THAT FUNDING MATTER.

Tucson, A. T., July 16, 1891.

My attention has just been called to an article in this evening's Citizen, copied from the Phoenix Herald of the 13th, in which appears a letter from Mr. Horton, dated December 31, 1890, offering to take our bonds on commission. From this letter it is evident that I have been wrong in my calculation as to the time Mr. Horton first made a direct bid on the bonds, which must from the reading of this letter of December 31, 1890, be subsequent to that date.

This being a fact, I have seriously misrepresented Secretary Murphy, and I owe him a public apology, which I hereby make. It certainly was not my intention to misrepresent or in the least misstate anything connected with this bonded matter. I therefore take this early and prompt manner of retracting all that appeared in THE REPUBLICAN that in any manner reflected on the Funding Board prior to the meeting of the late Legislature.

LEWIS WOLFLEY.

The Irish National Federation of America issued yesterday an address to "The Friends of Home Rule for Ireland" in which they refer to the long and brave struggle of the Irish people to regain their political rights and the heroic efforts of their representatives in Parliament for the past twelve years. Then the address proceeds as follows:

Painful as it is to say it, because of his past political services, Mr. Parnell can no longer be regarded as a possible leader of the Irish movement. Never did any nation offer a greater opportunity to inscribe an honored name on the page of history than Ireland offered him in her latest conflict, but he has thrown it from his grasp unpripped. He was the center of her councils, the connecting link of all her political forces. She finds herself mistaken. He has followed other courses, and left her power weakened and her councils divided.

The address continues in this spirit to criticize and denounce Parnell, and recites in detail his alleged acts of political blundering, his insults to Gladstone and hostility to the English Liberals, his intolerant bearing to the majority of the Irish Parliamentary party, his insults and insolence to the clergy, his "cowardly catering" to the Irish Times, and his "cold-hearted treatment" of the evicted tenantry.

The address is signed by Dr. Thomas Addis Emmett, president; Eugene Kelly, treasurer; James S. Coleman, secretary; Joseph P. Ryan, assistant secretary, and John Byrne, chairman of the board of trustees.

If the reports that Salton Lake continues to rise, while the Colorado is falling is true, there may still be something in the first published statement that the water comes from the Gulf of California. The land below Salton is practically a terra incognita, and there is a wide divergence of opinion as to its topography. If Hardy's Colorado and New river are the same, and flow as back water from the Gulf, there is no geographical reason why the lake should not be a permanent fixture. We do not think that there would be any special change in the climatic conditions of the immediately adjacent country if the lake were to become permanent, but there would undoubtedly arise other advantages.

TO EXPLAIN THE REASONS FOR THE ACTIONS OF THE ASSISTANT DEPUTY ATTORNEY. If they are explainable at all that gentleman himself can do so through the limited medium of his Democratic organ. If Mr. Williams could account for sending in his bill to the Board of Supervisors and then withdraw the same in the heat of an election campaign only to resubmit the bill at the close of the campaign, such explanation would be gratifying no doubt to his friends. It would likewise make the thorny way of future political greatness much more flowery.

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that for the past two months a notice has been kept standing at the head of THE REPUBLICAN warning business men "to allow no bills against this office except upon a written order from the management, some such bills have been permitted. The public at large is again notified that this paper will absolutely not assume any such indebtedness.

The Chamber of Commerce should begin a systematic way of advertising this section in California. There where the value of water is properly understood is where we must look to a certain extent for immediate returns. Nothing can be accomplished by standing still.

The new bounty law in California is only expected to cost the State about $400,000. This will lessen the number of candidates for the next Legislature. It's an ill wind that blows no good.

PROPERTY in the great Salt River Valley is now every cent asked for it and more. Now is the time to buy, and now is the time that the wise men are buying.

OMENE, the dancer, was unable to fill an engagement the other night owing to a sprain in the neck. This must be a new advertising dodge.

The morning organ shows a lack of bringing up in the disrespectful manner it assumes toward its superiors, i. e., this paper.

We have plenty room for good, able-bodied farmers in this valley, and I can make their independent fortunes by industry.

The whole Territory looks to Gov. Irwin to dispose of the bonds. We sincerely hope he succeeds.

BLAINE may be nervous, but not nearly so much as the Democratic Press over the same cause.

IMPORTANT news from Washington is expected daily.

WE may look for rain soon.

OUR WASHINGTON WOMEN.

How Their Wearing Apparel Is Affected by the McKinley Bill.

The Jenness-Miller gospel has so permeated fashionable society that the leading dressmaker in Washington refuses to fit a customer unless she present herself in glove fitting garments of either cotton, lisle, wool or silk. It may be of interest to know that these goods of American manufacture have surpassed those of foreign make, and thus far the retail dealers have not greedily and maliciously taken advantage of women's ignorance of the McKinley bill to raise the prices on these goods. I was informed by Miss O'Leary, an expert buyer in this line for the largest dry goods house in Washington, that the effect of the McKinley bill meant reduction of prices after a little time. She said that some of her fashionable customers still preferred imported underwear, fancying that it was a trifle better in shape and finish of seams, but that in all middle class manufacture of these cottons and wools, such as is worn by the great mass of our people, American goods have surpassed those of foreign make, and that a better quality for less money is made in this country, and notably in Michigan, than anywhere else in the world. It is astonishing how little the average woman knows either of the theory of Protection in general or of the McKinley bill in particular. The consequence of this is that women have been the principal sufferers from the shrewd dealers who raised their prices on the strength of the new tariff law. Had the women at large taken any sort of interest in the late campaign of education they might have suspected that a tradesman was lying when he asked an advanced price on articles which must have been cheapened in manufacture under the new law. Apropos of this, it is rather a good story that one prominent Ohio ex-congressman is telling at the expense of another Democratic statesman and wife.

The wife of Representative Outhwaite, of the Thirtieth Ohio district, has for many years purchased her fine boots of a certain Columbia (O.) dealer. The boots were made to order, and were uniformly marked nine dollars. A week or two after the McKinley bill became a law the lady, as was customary, had ordered her winter boots. Calling for them on the date agreed upon she found the order filled by the prompt and efficient boot-maker, but to her astonishment an eleven dollar tag had supplanted the usual nine dollar bill.

Inquiring as to the meaning, Mrs. Outhwaite was calmly informed that the passage of this nefarious tariff law had compelled them to raise the price of all goods.

Surprised and suspicious, but wholly unable to meet the case, the lady put down the parcel and refused to take the boots until she had consulted with her husband.

When his wife had hurriedly poured forth her grievance the Democratic statesman, forgetting everything but his familiarity with the subject and the atrocious swindle, sprang to his feet and exclaimed, so it is avowed by the Democratic ex-member, "Why, the ———— liar, you just go back and tell him that the McKinley bill kept him on the free list, and that if he is going to make any change he wants to take off two dollars."—Florence Huntley in American Economist.

CARE OF FARM ANIMALS

WHAT YOUR HORSE WOULD SAY IF HE COULD TALK TO YOU.

A Set of "Don'ts" for the Consideration of Horse Owners and Drivers—Read Them, Pay Heed to Them, and Your Horse Will Thank You All His Life.

Don't hitch me to an iron post or railing when the mercury is below freezing. I need the skin on my tongue.

Don't leave me hitched in my stall at night with a big cob right where I must lie down. I am tied and can't select a smooth place.

Don't compel me to eat more salt than I want by mixing it with my oats. I know better than any other animal how much I need.

Don't think, because I go free under the whip, I don't get tired. You would move up if under the whip.

Don't think because I am a horse that ironwoods and briars won't hurt my mouth.

Don't whip me when I get frightened along the road, or I will expect it next time and maybe make trouble.

Don't trot me up hill, for I have to carry you and the buggy and myself too. Try it yourself some time. Run up hill with a big load.

Don't keep my stable very dark, for when I go out into the light my eyes are injured, especially if snow be on the ground.

Don't say "whoa" unless you mean it. Teach me to stop at that word. It may check me if the lines break and save a runaway and smash up.

Don't make me drink ice cold water or put a frothy bit in my mouth. Warm the bit by holding it half a minute against my body.

Don't forget to file my teeth when they get jagged and I cannot chew my food. When I get lean it is a sign my teeth want filing.

Don't ask me to "back" with blinds on. I am afraid to.

Don't run me down a steep hill, for if anything should give way I might break your neck.

Don't put on my blind bridle so that it irritates my eyes, or so leave my forelock that it will be in my eyes.

Don't be so careless of my harness as to find a great sore on me before you attend to it.

Don't lend me to some blockhead that has less sense than I have.

Don't tie me out in the cold without a blanket after driving me until I sweat. I can catch cold and die.

Don't put blinders on me. The God who created me would have given me blinders naturally if I had needed them. Don't give me post hay after a hard day's work or a long rapid drive. I have a stomach and it needs filling.

Don't make my check rein so tight that it almost breaks my neck. I suffer quite as much as you would in so unnatural a position.—Logan Journal.

Care of the Stallion.

"Rest and fat are the greatest enemies of the horse," is a saying of the Arabs, and if every stallion owner would embody its truth in his practice there would be little need to write anything further on this subject. Its observance would be potent to improve the horse in health, strength, virility, endurance and longevity, and by "holding up the glass to nature" correct the irrational treatment and abnormal conditions under which he is often reared. Not that the conditions surrounding the horse in a state of nature should be wholly imitated, for they do not all tend to his improvement in the qualities adapted to man's use.

But it is worthy of note that the wild horse is tough, sound and healthy, and making due allowance for the influence of natural selection or the survival of the fittest, when we observe that he is seldom in a state of rest, that he lives in the open air, upon natural food, we may reasonably connect these as cause and effect, and safely consider exercise, pure air and simple diet the fundamental conditions upon which to build up, by skill in breeding and training, the highest and most perfect equine type.—Breeder's Gazette.

A la Wanamaker's!

The weather tomorrow is likely to be so so.

The boom in spring advertising.

Spring is the season when the young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. The young woman's imagination is more practically directed towards the numerous spring openings and contemplation of the bargains counter. Now is the time to advertise. Buyers are looking for bargains, and they naturally turn to these columns for announcements. You can expect them to look you up and ask if you have anything to sell.

Style is of paramount importance in advertising. We have been giving some striking samples of the possibilities in this line lately. Probably they have caught your eye. That's what they're for. This particular form of advertising has worked wonders in John Wanamaker's business, and is known as the Wanamaker style. It has made his fortune. Advertising will make your fortune if you have energy and nerve.

Top of column.

Such a location is very desirable and rather expensive. But it's cheap at any price. If your goods are all wool they deserve to rank high in our columns. But a well worded and tastefully designed ad where precedence of position is not essential. It will attract attention anywhere.

Next to reading matter.

Shrewd advertisers have a predilection for placing their announcement as nearly as possible to genuine reading matter, where it appeals insidiously to the wandering eye of the reader and distracts his attention from the Orislin in Europe to the Crisis in Crash. Towelings or the latest thing in Haberdashery.

Speaking of reading notices.

We can put your announcement in plain words, in plain type and in plain sight of every casual reader. This form of advertising proves exceedingly remunerative in some cases.

Run of the paper.

The advertiser who has sufficient faith in the integrity and discretion of our accomplished foreman to trust to his judgment in the location and display of advertisements never gets left in the long run. Change is a law of nature, and it is well to apply it in your business announcements. Variety is the spice of advertising.
